Chartis, a comprehensive healthcare advisory firm, today announced that Amit Jindal has joined the firm as a Director in Digital Transformation.

Jindal is a digital healthcare executive with more than 22 years of experience focused on improving care delivery through innovative, patient-centric strategies for large health systems, payers, and healthcare technology service providers. He's a proven leader in helping his clients improve consumer experience, operational efficiency, and digital healthcare business models.

"We are excited to welcome Amit to our team," said Tom Kiesau Chartis' Digital Transformation Co-Leader. "He brings decades of experience developing and deploying truly game-changing, high-impact digital transformation initiatives across a wide array of healthcare organizations. This experience, combined with his exceptional leadership skills, will further expand our ability to help clients thrive in today's rapidly changing healthcare context."

Jindal previously served as managing director at Accenture where he led enterprise-wide digital transformation engagements at some of the nation's largest and most recognized integrated healthcare companies.

A graduate of Delhi College of Engineering with a bachelor's in engineering, Jindal also has a Master of Business Administration from the Kelley School of Business at Indiana University.
