Chartis, a leading healthcare advisory firm, today announced that Craig Nurnberg has joined the firm as a Financial Transformation Senior Partner. Nurnberg is a seasoned industry leader specializing in end-to-end revenue cycle functionality, including pre-service, patient access, health information management, and patient financial services.

“We are very excited to have Craig join our team,” said Kevin Ormand, Chartis Managing Partner and Leader, Financial Transformation. “His significant depth and expertise in driving financial improvement through collaborative partnerships will profoundly impact our clients’ ability to drive transformational change, which supports our shared mission to materially improve healthcare delivery.”

In his new role, Nurnberg will leverage more than 20 years of expertise with complex healthcare organizations to optimize processes and improve financial outcomes through innovative revenue cycle strategies. Additionally, he will focus on driving performance enhancements across other critical operational areas to enable comprehensive organizational success.

Prior to Chartis, Nurnberg served as Performance Improvement Managing Director at Huron Consulting Group, where for two decades he led engagements focused on revenue enhancement, cost management, technology integration, strategy development, and revenue cycle managed services.

Nurnberg has a bachelor’s degree in business management administration from Georgia Institute of Technology.
