Chartis, a leading healthcare advisory firm, today announced Rachel Bienemann and John Coyle have joined the partnership to drive financial and digital transformation.

“Our firm's mission to make a material impact in healthcare has never been more important,” said Chartis president Greg Maddrey. “Disruption is changing the industry at a pace our clients have never experienced before. These seasoned leaders will work with our clients to co-develop solutions that accelerate transformation and reshape healthcare for the better.”

Rachel Bienemann joins Chartis as a Financial Transformation Senior Partner with more than two decades of experience helping clients transform their financial and operational performance. She has managed cross-functional teams through multiyear efforts to identify cost-saving opportunities, improve revenue cycle performance, optimize technology, and create system strategies and roadmaps for ongoing improvements. Before Chartis, Bienemann served as a Managing Director within Huron Consulting's Performance Improvement practice.

John Coyle joins Chartis as a Digital & Technology Transformation Senior Partner with more than 30 years of consulting experience. Coyle works across the healthcare ecosystem to enable organizations to transform their patient experience, operations, clinical care, and ultimately patient outcomes with AI- and digitally enabled solutions. Most recently, he was a Managing Director at Alvarez & Marsal. Prior to that, Coyle served as Managing Director and Partner at Boston Consulting Group and held leadership roles at Oliver Wyman and Accenture.
