Chartis, a leading healthcare advisory firm, today announced that it has acquired Healthlink Advisors (Healthlink), a digital and technology consulting firm focused on improving healthcare delivery and IT operations.

Founded in 2016 in St. Petersburg, FL, the firm of more than 60 advisory professionals brings depth and capability in enterprise resilience, technology implementation, enterprise imaging, and identity and access management, which complement Chartis' comprehensive digital and technology offerings and broad clinical, financial, and strategic transformation strength.

"Technology is driving advances in healthcare at a tremendous velocity," said Chartis co-founder and CEO Ken Graboys. "With Healthlink joining Chartis, we are further expanding our ability to help clients—from shaping their AI and digital strategies to implementing their most essential technologies."

Healthlink's professionals will join Chartis' Digital & Technology Transformation business, which will be led by Managing Partner Jody Cervenak and Healthlink co-founder and CEO Lindsey Jarrell. After a brief transition period, Healthlink will operate under the Chartis brand.

"What excites me most about joining Chartis is the deep alignment of our values and a shared passion for solving healthcare's most complex challenges. From the beginning, it's been clear that this is a genuine fit—for our clients, for our people, and for the impact we aspire to have on healthcare delivery," said Jarrell.
