Chartis, a leading healthcare advisory firm, today announced Taylor Kennedy has joined the firm as a Digital & Technology Transformation Senior Partner. He brings significant experience advising hospitals and health systems on how to use technology to reshape their operations and care delivery.

With 20 years of healthcare technology experience, Taylor leads complex engagements, connecting enterprise strategy across clinical, administrative, digital, data, and emerging technologies to advance transformation efforts. He helps clients navigate digital maturity, optimize enterprise architectures, and embed governance structures that ensure long-term success.

“We are excited to welcome Taylor to the partnership,” said Lindsey Jarrell, Managing Partner and Digital & Technology Transformation Leader at Chartis. “He brings a unique perspective honed from his advisory experience and entrepreneurial mindset, which will help our clients advance their technology transformation goals and reshape healthcare for the better.”

Before joining Chartis, Kennedy held leadership roles at Huron in digital transformation, intelligent automation, and high reliability. Previously, he helped bring population health and care coordination solutions to market at two healthcare technology startups and worked in clinical and operational benchmarking at Truven Health Analytics. He is an active member of the Children’s Foundation in Denver and previously served on its Board of Directors.

Taylor holds a bachelor’s degree in communication and an MBA from the University of Colorado.
